Like most German cities, Karlsruhe has a good public transportation system.

The whole upper ground train system is going to be reconstructed into a subway, so unfortunately, there are a lot of rail works in the city and this may cause some trouble with the train schedule. Nevertheless, using the train is a very fast and comfortable way of getting around in Karlsruhe.

You can find all schedules on the homepage of KVV: <http://www.kvv.de/>

The most important train for you is Line 3 (brown). It gets you to the DHBW or into the city.

Liability insurance

Anyone living in Germany should consider having “Haftpflichtversicherung” (personal liability insurance). This covers cases of liability for injury or damage to other persons or their property. You are covered whether the negligence was yours or that of a family member. It does not cover damages that have been caused by your car (you need to take out a separate insurance for this), but it covers liability for damage caused, for example, when riding a bicycle or breaking a window.

Having liability insurance is not a legal requirement in Germany, but most Germans do have it and it is strongly recommended for expats as well. It costs between 50 and 70 Euros per year.
